Gentoo Penguins

with flamboyant red-orange beaks, white-feather caps, and peach-colored feet, gentoo penguins stand out against their drab, rock-strewn Antarctic habitat.

Habitat

These charismatic waddlers, who populate the Antarctic Peninsula and numerous islands around the frozen continent, are the penguin world's third largest members, reaching a height of 30 inches and a weight of 72 pounds. Gentooos are partial to ice-free areas, including coastal plains, sheltered valleys, and cliffs. They gather in colonies of breeding

Antarctic Krill

It is a tiny euphasid Crustacean that looks like a shrimp. It has a hard calcified exoskeleton, also known as the carapace, divided into two parts: the cephalothorax which joins the head and the thorax, and the abdomen. Each part is divided into individual segments.

It has 6 pairs of appendages on the thorax that, towards the end of the body, merge and form the tail. The head is "crowned" by a pair of antennae.
